- Finding the right people that share the organization's vision towards greatness; but never settling for anything but the best employees.
- Placing the right people in the right assignments or career, even if through trial and error; but never overlooking the true assets. Even if a company needs to liquidate its losses – it must never sacrifice its most valuable people.
- Discovering the possibilities after realizing small pushes in the right directions matter. When energies are no longer diverted towards wasted efforts, such as “motivating the wrong people,” business can turn to more productive endeavors.

Measuring, Scoring & Controlling Turnover

Trying to compete locally or globally with higher than necessary turnover is a challenge many companies face. An organization's profits are directly related to the extensive cost of wages (averaging 30-50% of all income). One of the single greatest assets a growing business can arm itself with is qualified and motivated employees, which in turn reduces employment costs.
